ALPACA CARE & WELFARE GUIDE

These guidelines are designed to promote health, happiness and a general well being amongst your herd, regardless of size.

A full version is available on the British Alpaca Society website www.bas-uk-com.

THE ALPACAS

- Alpacas are naturally herd animals and only really feel safe with their own kind; they must not be kept singly.
- Generally they are hardy healthy animals and, as with all livestock, they should be checked at least once a day, preferably twice.
- By spending time with your animals you will get to know them and it is easier to tell when they are “out of sorts”. The earlier problems are detected and help administered, the greater the chance of a speedy recovery.
- Alpacas usually give little indication that they are feeling unwell until they are very sick. Early indications may include loss of appetite, spending more time lying around and not keeping up with the herd. Other symptoms may include abnormal breathing and/or posture, lameness, discharge from the eyes or nose, and just generally looking depressed.
- If there is every any doubt pertaining to the health and welfare of your animals, veterinary assistance should always be sought.
- Members of the British Camelid Veterinarian Society who are happy to advise on the treatment of Alpacas can be found at their website www.camelidvets.org.

YOU

- Never be afraid to ask if you have any problems. You could learn something new each day about Alpacas and they would still appear to have an air of mystery about them.
- If you experience any problems with newly purchased Alpacas your first point of call should be with the person you bought them from.
- Don't be afraid to question your vet and provide him with all the information you can. For example, mention the weight of a fully fleeced animal before he approaches with the hypodermic. There are many conflicting views and opinions regarding all aspects of these creatures.
- If selling animals, make sure clients know and understand the minimum requirements involved in looking after Alpacas.
- If possible, visit the new homes and ensure paddocks and field shelters are of adequate size and that the animals will be safe and looked after.
- Most importantly, enjoy your Alpacas !

ACCOMMODATION

- Adequate grazing should be provided for the number of animals kept.
- The stocking ratio for Alpacas is four to five per acre. This should be reduced if necessary during winter or when grass is low.
- Four foot sheep fencing using stock netting is suitable for Alpacas because they rarely jump and barbed wire should be removed. Post and rail and electric tape fencing can also be used, but avoid electric netting because animals can become entangled.
- It is advisable, if possible, to rotate grazing, allowing land to recover. Foot rot is not common in Alpacas, but if conditions are extremely wet for prolonged periods, there should be an area of drier ground provided.
- Alpacas are hardy animals and may be able to live outside all year round, providing they have some form of field shelter, which they utilise. An effective shelter, large enough for all the Alpacas in the field is especially important in some areas of the country that have more extreme (especially wet) weather.

- In larger fields, it is advisable to have a small enclosure or catch pen. By feeding animals here they will become accustomed to the area and it will make catching them easier for routine husbandry, training or veterinary care.
- Paddocks should be checked for toxic plants, and flowers. Remember that the animals long necks allow them to reach further than others.

HANDLING

- Most handling is easier to carry out in a small area, so a designated area to catch animals in is a must!
- Always handle animals with the respect they deserve; if you enter a pen in a mad rush with flailing arms and bullying tactics in mind you will never win. Calm, quiet and gentle, but with an authoritative manner is the way to go.
- Alpacas can be taught quite successfully to lead on a halter. This can be initiated with brief but frequent sessions. It takes time and patience and an understanding of your animals. A halter trained animal can often make life easier when the vet comes to call.
- Some animals become stressed, nervous or frightened when being handled and respond to this by simply lying down and refusing to move. The more they are handled, the more they will become accustomed to it.
- As a rule, Alpacas will usually walk away from you. When moving your animals always walk behind them gently, guiding them where you want them to go.
- If no catch pen is available, it is possible to catch an animal in a field with the aid of ropes, poles or even a few friends or family walking around with outstretched arms.

BREEDING

- On average, gestation between eleven to eleven and a half months and it is recommended that mating be at times to ensure late spring or early summer birth.
- Young females are ready to be put to a stud male only when they have reached 60 per cent of the weight of their mother, or are 14 months old. Following a normal birthing and complete cleansing within 12 hours of birth, a female should be in a fit condition to return to a male from 10-14 days post partum.
- It is known that some males are able to breed from about nine months of age but most males are not fertile until they are 2-3 years old.
- During copulation, the stud male intrudes through the cervix of the female and deposits sperm repeatedly into each uterine horn. This action can cause damage to the uterine lining and disrupts the developing pregnancy. Frequent and indiscriminate mating should be avoided.
- The selection of stud males is an important decision. The stud should be chosen to add improvements to the female such as better crimp or lower micron count because the male has a major influence on the quality of the offspring.
- Cria should be weaned at around six months of age.
- It is unwise for the safety of a newly born Cria to have expectant mothers birthing in a field with deep puddles, ponds or streams.
- Hypothermia in cold or wet weather can be fatal to young newborn Cria.
- Cria should be vaccinated at four weeks and a booster given four to six weeks later. From then, they should fall into the regular schedule of the adult herd. Worming of Cria is normally commenced at weaning. Late born Cria can be given vitamin A, D and E boosters in the autumn as a precaution against rickets.

FEEDING

- Different groups of animals will have different nutritional requirements.
- Always ensure that there is enough grazing. If there is not, and especially in winter months, the animals should be offered hay or haylage.
- There must be a constant supply of fresh, clean drinking water.
- Heavily pregnant and lactating females and other animals also require a supplement concentrate feed during the winter months. When feeding concentrate, ensure that the food is suitable and offered in the correct quantities to meet your animals nutritional requirements.
- Feeding of sugar beet in the winter is a good source of energy.
- Don't use hay nets because animals could get their heads caught and hang.
- Be aware that a number of plants are poisonous to Alpacas and steps should be taken to ensure that they are removed from the paddocks.

TRANSPORT

- Alpacas can be transported in a horsebox, livestock trailer, or any other approved vehicle for the transportation of livestock, providing there is enough room for the animal to stand.
- Animals should not be tied to the trailer in any way because they will usually sit in transit.
- Flooring to the trailer should be capable of being disinfected – ideally rubber to provide the animals with some form of grip.
- Adult males and females should travel separately and can be divided by a solid partition.
- Travelling time must be monitored. Animals may only be in transit for nine hours out of each 24.
- Stops should be made to provide the animals with clean drinking water and food. This especially applies to females with young Cria at foot and allows the Cria time to suckle. Animals must also have the opportunity to stand and defecate.
- It is advisable in case of accident or emergency to carry with you sufficient head collars and lead ropes for each animal being transported.
- Seek veterinary advice when transporting heavily pregnant females. Judgements should take into account travelling time and distance.

ABOUT AZSU

The AzSu herd was founded by my late wife Su some 18 years ago. She had fallen in love with them at first sight when she spotted them at a local country fair. These strange creatures called Alpacas captivated Su and she resolved to learn all she could about them.

Her first 5 arrived in January 2000. From that date on she was hooked. She wanted more. It was clear we couldn't do it where we lived at that time with only 3 acres, half of that being the garden, and so we moved to Norfolk and 55 acres; a blank canvas upon which Su would make her mark. She wanted to know everything about Alpacas; their handling, their husbandry, their history, their purpose as a fleece animal, the conversion of their fleece to fabric. She joined and became active in the 2 breed associations. She travelled up and down the country talking with established breeders, both at shows and on their farms, but was confused by the conflicting information she received. We discussed this and it became apparent that she needed to go 'back to basics' a phrase that was quite popular at that time.

She was to find her 'basics' in Peru, in the Andean altiplano, original homeland of the Alpaca. She booked herself onto a month residential course arranged by the acknowledged senior authority on Alpacas, Dr. Julio Sumar of the International Alpaca Judging School. But she had no intention of becoming a judge, she just wanted to learn as much as she could. She was most apprehensive about it. Never having done exams in a big way, she felt that this could well be beyond her ability – but her appetite for knowledge drove her forward.

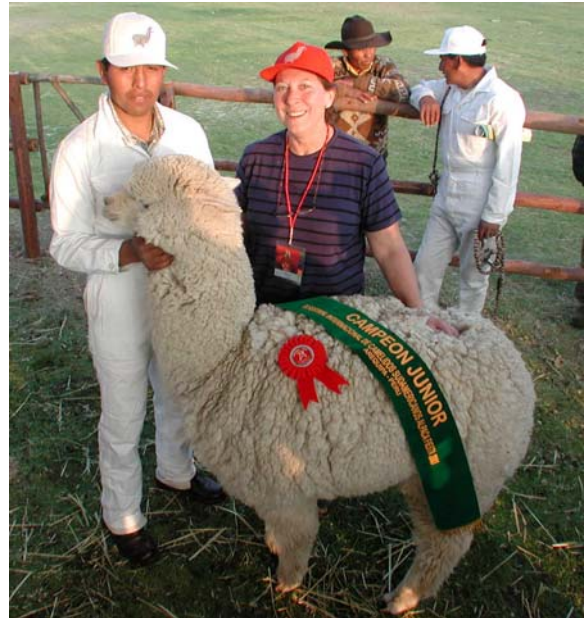

Learning about Alpacas in Peru

As it was, she came top of her class, and Julio became her lifelong mentor, referring to him as 'her guru'. She regularly visited Peru after that, and would be invited into the ring at shows judged by Julio to award the prizes for the best animals that he had selected. Quite by accident, she became an international judge herself. As I said, it was not her intention, but her new found friends in the Alpaca community who recognised her natural talent and persuaded her, and so she judged for many years in the USA and Ireland.

She was especially keen to put into practice what she had learnt in Peru to improve the quality of her own herd. I have in mind one particular show that illustrates just how good a judge of a fine Alpaca she had become. She had been looking at importing a top quality stud male from Peru for some time and had identified and bought such an animal from an unknown local breeder. Prior to leaving the country, he was entered by his breeder into the 2003 Alpaca Fiesta in Arequipa. This being the big show for Alpacas in Peru and indeed, the world. Her Alpaca bore the number '65'. Out of all the Alpacas entered into the junior male section, and note that only the best are entered, he was placed fifth, which in itself was quite an achievement and justification of her purchase. But then the judge took a step back and reviewed his placings. He moved 65 up to fourth place. Wow! He stepped back again, had a closer look at 65, then moved him up to third place. Wow, wow!! Once again he reconsidered his selection and once again 65 moved up, to second and finally first place. You can imagine the emotion of the moment. The judge in his summing up called 65 an example of the perfect Alpaca.

65 eventually came to Norfolk and was named Charlemagne. (Su named her males after Roman emperors and her females after gemstones). Sadly, he died in her arms some 2 years later due to a twisted bowel. But not before he sired many progeny and firmly established his genetics into Su's herd.

Su never considered her Alpacas as 'livestock'. She gave each one a name and knew each one by that name. She would speak to them individually, soothing them and stroking their muzzle. If males were fighting, as they do, she would sharply rebuke them and order them to stop. When she walked among them, the herd would consider her as one of them. They would gather around her. She had an affinity with them. She was, to coin a phrase, their 'Herd Goddess'.

Celebrating with Charlemagne, aka '65'

It is true to say that it was Su who brought Alpacas to Norfolk. When we arrived in 2000, these animals were known as 'funny Llamas'. Local people called our road 'Llama Lane'. Now they are properly referred to as Alpacas. She held an annual open day specifically for local people, who would enjoy an afternoon out and interact with her precious animals. She regularly appeared on local radio and TV. She instigated and organised the Alpaca section at the Royal Norfolk Show. She loved to share her enthusiasm for her Alpacas with anyone who would care to listen and many sought her advice and encouragement in setting up their own herds.

Alpaca walking on Holkham Beach, Norfolk

She also achieved a goal that is rare amongst Alpaca owners, that is, a successful outlet for her own harvested fleece. She opened her shop, The Alpaca Barn, in a converted pig shed on the farm. As a supportive member of the 'Produced in Norfolk' initiative she was keen to promote locally produced goods, and converted the fleece of her animals into finished garments which she sold exclusively in her shop. Amongst her last projects was to oversee its refurbishment to include more display space, refreshment and disabled facilities and a demonstration area for local craftspeople.

When Su passed away in 2010 our daughter Nikki took over her mother's legacy. However, Nikki has a different dream for the farm which requires a considerable downsizing of the herd. For myself, I am running down my business interests as I plan for (semi-) retirement. Nevertheless, a core herd of around 30 Alpacas will remain and AzSu will continue to provide local clients with advice, shearing, agistment, medical services and Alpaca walks around our beautiful farm. The Alpaca Barn shop also continues with a growing online presence. So one way or another, Alpacas will continue at The Low Farm.

We look forward to welcoming you to our auction. From quality animals for breeding to pet quality for your spare field, I'm sure we'll have the right Alpacas just for you.
